

ABSTRACT

A communication received from a first information-processing device directed to a second information-processing device includes a data indicative of the geographic location of the first information-processing device. The second information-processing device redirects the communication so received from the first information-processing device to a third information-processing device in accordance with the data indicative of the geographic location of the first information-processing device. The third information-processing device then services the communication so directed.